

Pulling together

By Melanio Nsue Oyana

In this difficult and unprecedented emotional time, we must all pull together.

We are at war!

We all know that is extremely difficult to fight an invisible enemy who is testing our entire way of living as civilization.

Covid-19, as it has been named has pushed our body system, our health service and our economy to the limits.

Unfortunately, many people have lost their life as the virus is hitting harder and harder...

But life is stronger than death!

We (human beings) apart of our instinct to survive, we must add another thing on top:
Ambition.

An ambitious individual is the one who never surrenders. He always faces challenges and finds the better way to overcome troubles, no matter the scales of the troubles.

We will overcome these difficult, sad and emotional moments!

Yes, we will. Life is stronger than death!

We were born free. Unfortunately, we have felt how difficult is to live in isolation. But if we don't do the right things, the enemy will hit us more and more.

We are better than Covid-19. Right now, we are building our human ingenuity together to defeat this virus. But we must do the right things.

The right thing to do now is to "Stay at home, protect our NHS and save lives"

This virus will be beaten!

Then, we will meet our siblings, friends and our loved ones again...

We will enjoy our football matches in our stadium and in our pubs again...

Universities, schools and shops will re-open and we will get back to work again... There is no doubt of this.

To go back to normal, as we deserve, a huge effort must be done from all of us. But there are not enough words to thank NHS and care home staff. These amazing people are working on the front line using their knowledge and skill to protect our lives. In addition, all key workers that maintain and keep our society moving forward.

Let's push all together, nobody should be left behind. Let's protect and facilitate others to protect our precious and irreplaceable gift:

Our life!
